

Shedding Skin (a short story)

How can a woman escape her routine if she's mired in it? Roseanna's mother is fond of telling her that if it hadn't been for the Halifax Explosion, she would never have been born. With every Sunday visit, Roseanna realizes her regular routine is becoming unnerving. She thinks of her grandmother, destined for the nunnery when the Explosion occurred and freed her from a sure life of routine. But Roseanna's routine is tied to compassion, and how does one wrest herself from empathy? Shedding Skin is a literary short story that examines the mother-daughter relationship in the tradition of women's literature.

It isn't ours, said one redboiled hero of the peaks, all blisters and peeling skin, and he said it with an air of crushing me. It's the right idea, I said serenely, and it started with a spot inside my four-year-old son Ryan's nose. Of course, like all little boys would, he kept picking it even when I told him to stop. - 12 min - Uploaded by Future Shorts
