

The Ebb-Tide

The strange and memorable character of Attwater, ruthlessly violent while talking always of Jesus forgiveness, who alternately repels and fascinates the other characters, reflects Stevensons own conflicted feelings about Christianity. Oh, what does it matter? cried Herrick. Here I am. I am broken crockery; I am a burst drum; the whole of my life is gone to water; I have nothing left that I believe in, except my living horror of myself. Why do I come to you? I dont know; you are cold, cruel, hateful; and I hate you, or I think I hate you. But you are an honest man, an honest gentleman. I put myself, helpless, in your hands. What must I do? If I cant do anything, be merciful and put a bullet through me; its only a puppy with a broken leg! -- If I were you, I would pick up that pistol, come up to the house, and put on some dry clothes, said Attwater.
