Not illustrated. 1720 Excerpt: ...me how thou hast done this long while; for, unless I am mistaken, tis above three years since we saw you last in Town. Freem. Why truly, Tim, I live after my old laudable Custom still; fometimes I divert my self with a chearsul Boule, and fometimes pass aw,y an Hour or two with an honest old Author; for, to say the Tiuth, your new-Gentlemen scarce deserve a Reading. I pay my Taxes without repining, and do what Good I can amongst my Neighbours; never trouble my self with other Mens Business; and tho the Duty I owe to their present Majesties, will not permit me to talk fo scandalously and difrespectsully of the two late Reigns, as fome hot-headed Sots have done, yet I am I am as well satisfyd with the present Establishment, and as zealous for the Prosperity of old England, as the farwardest Courtier; who has made his Fortune by the Revolution, and consequently is obligd to stand up for it, as well upon the Score of his Interest, as his Choice. Thus I have answerd your Question; and now pritheer let me know what News, you have in Town? Tim. A right Country Gentlemans Question, I saith, for the first Thing he generally asks you, is, What is the News? As the Country-Ladies, when they come up to Town, enquire in the first Place, Winch it the newest Play or Lampon? Which is tht topping Mistress of the Court? Or the most fashionable Suit of Ribbons at the Exchange? Well then, to satisfy your Curiosity, you must know, that there has lately happend a very remarkable Change or Conversion, (call it which you pleafe) of a certain Perfon here in Town, which no Body could ever have imagind or expected; and now I leave it to you,-to conjecture whit it is. Freem. A Conversion, and that a very remarkable one too! Why then I sancy Tint, that your Friend Mr. Bays is...
